The students in Mrs. Kerrie Wilson's English classes will shortly begin reading the novel, I have Lived a Thousand Years. This is a first hand account of surviving the Holocaust. Research says that students should have an understanding of their topic before they start to read. To accomplish this goal, Mrs. Wilson required them to do an online inquiry on the Holocaust. They completed KWL charts and reviewed websites concerned with the Holocaust. Each student prepared a speech on a specific topic associated with this event.

Arthur Treacher's on Elm Road provided lunch for the students who made the best classroom presentations. The students agreed that their research provided valuable background information. They believed that the speech making component of the assignment caused them to learn more deeply because they needed to share their knowledge with others.
