Building Trades Students Construct Mailboxes

“Neither rain nor sleet or dark of night will prevent the postman from completing his appointed rounds.” If interviewed on the topic, the letter carriers appreciate a mailbox that is sturdy and can withstand the challenges of Mother Nature. For that reason mailman in every locale would salute the efforts of the junior students in the Building Trades program at the TCTC.

They have designed and constructed brick mailboxes according to specifications provided to them by their program teacher, John Cotton. This project allowed them to utilize the skills they have acquired in their lab.

Area contractors served as the judges for the contest and provided more than $200 worth of prizes for the event. The top four students in order were, blank, blank, blank and blank
